Introduction

A notable feature of Dublin City life from the mid-seventeenth century onwards was the presence of small but compact groups of Dissenting Protestants, that is, those distinct from the Established Anglican Church of Ireland.¹ These Dissenters included various kinds of Presbyterians, as well as Quakers, Independents, Baptists, French Huguenots, Methodists, and of course Moravians.² The Anglican Church of Ireland was until 1869 an Established Protestant Church, that is, a virtual arm of the state endowed with privileges and important powers of parochial government and tax collection. Although Dissenting Protestants did not suffer under the Penal Laws to the same extent as Catholics, it is not always remembered that they too were subject to disabilities such as exclusion from high office and liability to pay tithes.

The Moravian Church today has about 900,000 members in the Americas, Africa and Europe. The Moravians had their origins in a pre-Reformation Protestant Church called the Unitas Fratrum or United Brethren, a Hussite movement which arose in the mid-fifteenth century in Moravia and Bohemia (now part of the Czech Republic). The Brethren underwent a revival in the 1720s, and because so many of their members were from the former region, they became known as Moravians. A Saxon noble, Count Nicholas Ludwig von Zinzendorf, was attracted by the beliefs of the Moravians and settled refugee adherents of the church on his estate at Herrnhut in Saxony.³

Under Zinzendorf's guidance, the Moravian Church became a vigorous missionary movement, as members travelled throughout Europe seeking converts and establishing strictly organised settlements modelled on Herrnhut. The Moravians arrived in England in the 1730s, where they were at first greeted by some Anglicans as representatives of an ancient Protestant Church, though in time this positive response would be replaced by a more critical attitude.⁴

Some Dublin citizens on business in London in 1744 were said to have been extremely impressed by the preaching of John Cennick, a convert to Moravianism. They therefore invited him to come to Dublin, and in June 1746 he duly travelled over to the city. Cennick preached first at a Baptist Meeting House in Skinner's Alley, succeeding in making a significant number of converts, chief among whom was a young Baptist, Benjamin Latrobe.⁵ Cennick then proceeded northwards, and in the years following preached with considerable success in Antrim, Armagh, Derry and other counties. The Moravians had less impact outside Dublin and the North, but did establish some congregations in Counties Galway and Clare.⁶

Cennick's mission in Ireland did not always run smoothly, however. In the first place the Baptists soon asked the Moravians to quit the Skinner's Alley Meeting House, as the Methodists had offered them a higher rent. This obviously galvanised Cennick and his followers into securing their own premises in Big Booter Lane, now Bishop Street. In June 1748, a Dublin mob, probably the notorious Liberty Boys, attacked the house when a service was in progress, a reflection of the complex sectarian tensions which afflicted the city at that time.⁷

In 1754 the Moravians decided to build a new church on the ground behind the house in Bishop Street, and the foundation stone was laid on 11 September. A temporary burial ground was also prepared behind the church, in which a total of five children were interred.⁸ A desire to possess a separate burial place was realised in 1764, when a plot of land at Whitechurch, County Dublin, measuring 2 roods 4½ perches, was leased for 298 years at an annual rent of £2 sterling from congregation member Moses Verney, with Jonathan Binns acting as lessee in trust for the Moravians.⁹ The Whitechurch Cemetery was enlarged by a half acre in 1776 and in 1874 the present entrance gate was constructed.¹⁰

The first burial took place in the new Whitechurch Cemetery on 29 April 1764, being that of the minister John Teltschig (or Toeltschig).¹¹ Teltschig was a native of Moravia and had resided at Herrnhut before embarking on missionary work.¹² Teltschig's original gravestone at Whitechurch has been replaced by a replica, and it is assumed that the original is in safe keeping.¹³ Other ministers buried at Whitechurch include Zacharias Caries died 1772, Jacob Eberle died 1876,

John Hartley died 1811, Theophilus Zippel died 1881, and interestingly two females, Martha Schneider died 1770 and Sarah Steinhauer died 1772.¹⁴

For a time, the Moravians also had a second Dublin church in Stafford Street, but this was closed in 1777.¹⁵ The Bishop Street Church remained in use until it was superseded in the late nineteenth century by a new red brick building facing on to Kevin Street, which runs parallel to Bishop Street. Dwindling numbers caused the Moravians to dispose of their Bishop Street/Kevin Street premises in 1959, but the Dublin Congregation continued to meet at various other locations until it was disbanded in 1980. The Kevin Street Church has been put to various uses religious and commercial over the years, and remarkably, given the loss of so many historic Dublin buildings, the old Bishop Street Church has survived. Having being utilised for many years as a warehouse, the Bishop Street structure has now been incorporated in an office development.

The picturesque Moravian Cemetery in Whitechurch, County Dublin, which adjoins Whitechurch Church of Ireland Vicarage, inevitably attracts the curiosity of those walking past.¹⁶ Through the gate of the still neatly tended graveyard can be seen regular rows of compact gravestones dating from the 1760s on, each one about 12 by 18 inches (31 by 46 centimetres), with males buried on one side and females on the other. This compactness and the foreshortened view have given rise to the legend that Moravians are interred standing up, but of course there is no truth in this! Certainly the separation of males and females in death reflects the rather stern division of the sexes in Moravian congregations. Thus separate dwellings were kept for 'single brethren' and 'single sisters', called 'choir houses', and frequently there were also residences for widows.¹⁷

During the years 1985-90, with the permission of the late Reverend John Berry, the writer and his wife Margaret McGinn copied the memorial inscriptions in Whitechurch Cemetery, stopping at 1900. There is a total of 629 memorials to that year, 273 on the left or male side and 356 on the right or female side (there are an additional 73 memorials dating between 1901-90). Eight of the memorials have more than one name inscribed, usually siblings or children buried with mothers, and there are 5 males buried on the female side of the cemetery. Taking account of these departures from the norm, the inscriptions presented below refer to a total of 638 individuals, 282 or 44% male and 356 or 56% female, indicating a clear preponderance of females over males in the Dublin Moravian Congregation.

Each stone is inscribed with minimal but nevertheless genealogically informative details, usually name of deceased (but rarely any address), date of death with date of birth or else age at death, as well as number of stone, and in the case of the earlier memorials, frequently also abbreviations indicating marital status. The memorial inscriptions as presented below are not literally transcribed, but given as far as possible in a standardised form. There are many memorials to children, especially in the period before 1800, and still-born infants very frequently appear to have been named Beatus or Beata ('blessed'). A small number of those buried in Whitechurch were born in the late seventeenth century, including Thomas Finley born 1693, Hannah Gilbert born 1690, William Grant born 1697, Sarah Hague born 1682 and Jane Mondet born 1686.¹⁸

Moravian Cemetery, Whitechurch

The most common family names recorded in the Moravian Cemetery at Whitechurch are as follows: Alley (9), Binns (33), Black (10), Carey (12), Clarke (8), Cooney (14), Dezouche (14), Egan (11), Elliott (15), Gordon (10), Jones (8), Keville (12), Lemmon (10), Linfoot (12), Mann (8), Moller (8), Osborne (13), Price (8), Smith (8), Taylor (8), Warren (19), Williams (15). Most of these surnames are of British origin, as might be expected in the case of members of a Protestant denomination living in Dublin, but there are a few names of Irish origin, examples being Cooney and Egan, with one presumably of Huguenot stock, Dezouche, and another perhaps German, Moller.

Those tracing Moravian ancestors will no doubt be interested to know that the original and remarkably detailed records of the Dublin Congregation from the 1750s onwards are among the archives of the church in Gracehill, County Antrim, with microfilm copies in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland in Belfast.¹⁹ The writer finds it ironic that although the National Archives of Ireland's premises in Bishop Street in Dublin are only a stone's throw away from the old Moravian Church, one has to travel to Belfast to view copies of its records. It would seem appropriate that the National Archives should hold copies of extant southern Dissenter as well as Church of Ireland registers, leaving the National Library to concentrate on Catholic registers.

Burials are listed chronologically in the Dublin Moravian Church Books, and in the case of a number of semilegible or illegible inscriptions in Whitechurch, the reading was completed by checking the microfilm copies of these registers. It may be relevant to note that the registers record a total of 652 interments between 1764 and 1900, with a grand total of 720 to 1979.²⁰ As there are only 638 individuals recorded on the Whitechurch memorials for the period 1764-1900, this would indicate that some individuals could have been buried without memorials and/or a number of stones may not have survived. There is also evidence that some members of the congregation were buried away from Whitechurch, for example, Catherine McLaine, born 26 December 1716, died 5 June 1799, who was interred in the burial ground at the end of Cathedral Lane in Dublin (known as the Cabbage Garden), 'where her late husband lies'.²¹

The following are yearly average burials calculated from the Church Books, which even allowing for improvement in mortality rates, indicate a progressive decline in the size of the congregation.

Average yearly burials
1764-1799	7.9
1800-1849	5.0
1850-1899	2.3
1900-1979	0.9

It was recorded that there was a total of 238 individuals in the Moravian Dublin congregation in 1788 but this had fallen to 110 a century later in 1888.²²

The Moravian Church Books contain a remarkable level of detail beyond the usual listing of baptisms, marriages and burials, and it would certainly be very desirable if these records could be digitised for the benefit of genealogical and historical researchers. A few case studies abstracted mainly from the register of members are presented here in order to demonstrate the quality of content in the Moravian archives.

The above mentioned Jonathan Binns is described as having been born in Dublin on 17 September 1720, religion

Baptist, trade ironmonger, was 'awakened' by Brother Cennick in 1746 and received into the congregation in 1750, married firstly Ann Emerson in 1745 and secondly Ann Verney in 1764, was excluded from and readmitted to the congregation at some point, 'departed this life' 21 July 1786 and was buried on the 24th.²³ It is recorded that Jonathan Binns's wife Ann Verney was born in Dublin 26 October 1744, daughter of Moses Verney, and had seven sons and nine daughters, one born after her husband's death.²⁴ The United Irishman John Binns (1772-1860) was a grandson of Jonathan, but does not appear to have been very prominent in the affairs of the Moravian Church.²⁵ Moses Verney, who is also mentioned above, is recorded as having been born in Sunderland near Newcastle on 23 May 1722, religion Independent, and following his death on 10 September 1800 he was buried at Whitechurch.²⁶

Samuel Fairbrother is recorded as having been born in Dublin on 20 August 1720, educated as a Quaker and baptised in St Catherine's Church, trade weaver, joined the Methodists 1746 and received into the Moravian congregation 1750, married Elizabeth Hose 1755 and 'went home happily' 10 March 1788.²⁷ Alas, there were some who did not meet the high standards set by the Dublin Moravians, for example, one Grace Bardon, born Edinburgh, religion Church of Scotland, who having been 'awakened' by Brother Latrobe in 1747 was eventually ‘excluded for getting drunk’.²⁸ While this level of detail is not to be found for all members, of course there is also much information on couples and children in the marriage and baptismal sections of the Church Books.

There is one deficiency in the Moravian records, in that addresses of individuals are not generally supplied, but this can be remedied in the case of those in a substantial way of trade by reference to Dublin directories. Thus in 1780 Jonathan Binns was listed as an ironmonger resident at 71 Dame Street, and Moses Verney was listed as a papermaker resident at 21 Old Church Street.²⁹ After her husband Jonathan’s death in 1786, Ann (Verney) Binns continued in business as an ironmonger in Dame Street.³⁰ While Samuel Fairbrother is not listed in the 1780 directory, interestingly his marriage to Elizabeth Hose in 1755 is recorded in the registers of the Church of Ireland Parish of St Luke, underscoring the advisability of also checking Anglican records in the case of Dissenters.³¹

The Moravians are thus one of Dublin’s most interesting but lesser known Dissenting congregations, and the memorial inscriptions of members buried in Whitechurch, County Dublin, now follow. A schematic map precedes the inscriptions, showing males on the left, females on the right, with numbered rows and gravestones, which should facilitate the location of individual burial places.

Memorial Inscriptions from the Moravian Cemetery, Whitechurch, County Dublin

The Moravian Church, the Unitas Fratrum or United Brethren, is a pre-Reformation Protestant Church which today has about 900,000 adherents worldwide. Moravian congregations were established in Ireland in the 1740s, principally in Dublin and Ulster. The Moravians built their first church in Bishop Street, Dublin, in 1754, which structure still survives although now incorporated in a modern office complex. In 1764 the Moravians opened a burial ground at Whitechurch, County Dublin. The first burial in the new cemetery was that of the minister John Teltschig. There are over 700 stones in the graveyard, each about 12 by 18 inches, with men buried on one side and women on the other. Inscriptions from 629 memorials dated from 1764-1900 are included in the present booklet. The principal family names include Alley, Binns, Black, Carey, Clarke, Cooney, Dezouche, Egan, Elliott, Gordon, Jones, Keville, Lemmon, Linfoot, Mann, Moller, Osborne, Price, Smith, Taylor, Warren, Williams. The Dublin Moravian Congregation was disbanded in 1980 and its records are held at Gracehill, County Antrim, with microfilm copies available in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland in Belfast.
